Hillel International Launches New Center for Community Outreach

ASHINGTON – After two years evolving under the umbrella of Hillel International, The David Project will become the Hillel U Center for Community Outreach, a new initiative to inspire relationship building across cultural, religious and ethnic divides on campuses throughout the Hillel movement.

The David Project was created to help Jewish student leaders build mutually beneficial and enduring partnerships with other student organizations so that the pro-Israel community is integrated and valued on campus. This work will continue with the new Center, combining The David Project's proven relationship building methodology with Hillel U's training and empowerment platform.

Building off of the success of The David Project in recent years in bringing together diverse communities for dialogue and understanding, the new Center will provide resources needed for campus Hillels and their professionals to speak to the cross-cutting identities of today's college students. This work is built on the same values that underpin Hillel's engagement work, with the goal of creating authentic intergroup relationships based on listening and respect.

By organizing relationship building initiatives, students will engage their peers in conversation, organize jointly led programs with student groups, and create initiatives such as interfaith Seders, dialogue nights and cultural exchanges. These activities will actualize Hillel's concern for other campus organizations and the issues they advocate for on campus and beyond. Through this work, Hillels will broaden their network on campus, engage students across campus life in dialogue and educational programming, and strengthen the social fabric of their campuses.

"Hillel is a place for every Jewish student, and most students today identify as something other than just Jewish," said Philip Brodsky, executive director of the new Center for Community Outreach. "By strengthening intergroup relationships, Jewish groups and their partners will, together, address issues of importance to the diverse members of the Jewish community today such as social justice, fighting anti-Semitism and hate, and supporting Israel, while also addressing issues of concern for other campus communities and coming together to learn about and celebrate one another's vibrant cultures. The new center will be a one-stop shop for Hillel professionals who will in turn teach Jewish students how to feel confident in their Judaism in leadership positions outside of Hillel."

"In the last two years as part of Hillel International, The David Project has developed itself into a leader in bringing diverse communities together for dialogue and understanding around Israel, anti-Semitism and other pressing issues relevant to Jewish students and our community partners on campus," said Adam Lehman, interim CEO of Hillel International. "As the Hillel U Center for Community Outreach, we will expand this work by providing new tools and resources for Hillel professionals across the country and around the world to engage students in relationship building and building connections around cross-cutting identities, shared values and experiences."

The Center for Community Outreach will enable Hillel professionals in relationship building methodology through:

Community Outreach Cohorts: The Center will provide support to a cohort of campus Hillels each year in writing and implementing a two-year strategic outreach plan to build relationships with non-Jewish student communities.

Trainings: The Center will focus on specific elements of relationship building, such as how to get started with outreach and how to maximize the impact of an Israel

Thought Provoking Insights from Rabbi Simon Rosenbach

Rabbi Simon Rosenbach

✦ I am always amazed how our sages, at least in the weeks before Rosh Hashanah, organized the weekly readings to coincide with spiritual preparation of the High Holy Days. For example, Nitzavim occurs always on the last Shabbat before Rosh Hashanah, and Nitzavim encapsulates the themes of Rosh Hashanah. I wouldn't say that Nitzavim presages the themes of Rosh Hashanah. I wouldn't even say that Nitzavim portends, or forecasts, the themes of Rosh Hashanah. I would say that Nitzavim is a reverse echo of the themes of Rosh Hashanah.

See, I set before you this day life and prosperity, death and adversity. For I command you this day, to love the Lord your God, to walk in His ways, and to keep His commandments, His laws, and His rules, that you thrive and increase, and that the Lord your God may bless you in the land that you are about to enter and possess. But if your heart turns away and you give no heed, and are lured into the worship and service of other gods, I declare to you this day that you shall certainly perish; you shall not long endure on the soil that are crossing the Jordan to enter and possess. I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day: I have put before you life and death, blessing and curse. Choose life – if you and your offspring would live – by loving the Lord your God, heeding His commands, and holding fast to Him. For thereby you shall have life and shall long endure upon the soil that the Lord swore to your ancestors, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give to them.

Rosh Hashanah (and Yom Kippur too) is all about life. Inscribe us in the Book of Life. Seal us in the Book of life. Moses could have said these words in the Book of Numbers. Moses could have said these words in the Book of Leviticus. Moses could have said these words in the Book of Exodus. But, no, Moses waited to the Shabbat before Rosh Hashanah (or the sages arranged Moses' words), so the Torah coincides with the themes of the holiday.

As we approach the High Holy Days, the Torah also describes Moses' waning days, and the transfer of power to Joshua. It is good that we read the few last parshiot in the Book of D'varim at this time in our real lives, because Israelis had an election on September 17, and the government is not yet settled. Next Tuesday, I will update those of you who have not followed the election results, and maybe we will have time for questions.

As I say every year at this time, if I have offended anybody, please forgive, but tell me what I did to offend you. Otherwise, I will not learn. ✡
